See Red Women's Workshop (London) is a collective who created a lot of feminist posters between 1974-1990. Working collectively was central to the ethos of See Red, as was sharing skills and knowledge. For all their work an idea would be discussed, a member would work on a design, bring it back for comment, someone else might make changes and so on until the collective were satisfied with the end result; no one individual took the credit.
